

ABSTRACT

A semiconductor substrate is provided over which electrically conductive columns are formed along with electrically conductive rows crossing over the electrically conductive columns. A plurality of memory components are formed each having a resistance value corresponding to multiple logical bits and non-volatile memory cells are each formed by connecting a memory component between an electrically conductive row and an electrically conductive column.